Part – V

Comprehension Paragraph

The size of each collection route will be determined by the amount of waste per stop, distance between stops, speed of loading, speed of truck, traffic conditions during loading time, etc.

Basically, the route should consist of a proper amount of work for a crew for the daily working period. The crew should service all properties eligible for this service in their area. Routes should, whenever practical, be compact, with a logical progression through the area. Unnecessary travel should be avoided. Traffic conditions on the route should be thoroughly studied to prevent lost time in loading, to reduce hazards to employees, and to minimize tying up of regular traffic movements by collection forces. Natural and physical barriers and arterial streets should be used as route boundaries wherever possible to avoid lost time in travel.

Routes within a districts should be laid out so that the crews start at the point farthest from the disposal area and, as the day progresses, move toward that area, thus reducing the length of the haul. When possible, the work of the crews in a district should be parallel as they progress throughout the day, with routes finishing up within a short distance of each other. This enables the supervisor to be present when crews are completing their work and enables him to shift crews to trouble spots to complete the day's work.

Questions:

1. Based on the above passage, an advantage of having collection routes end near one another is that:
 - (A) Routes can be made more compact
 - (B) Unnecessary travel is avoided, saving manpower
 - (C) The length of the haul is reduced
 - (D) The supervisor can exercise better manpower control

2. Of the factors mentioned above which affect the size of a collection route, the two over which the sanitation forces have LEAST control are:
- (A) Amount of waste; traffic conditions
 - (B) Speed of loading; amount of waste
 - (C) Speed of truck; distance between stops
 - (D) Traffic conditions; speed of truck
3. According to the above passage, the size of a collection route is probably good if:
- (A) It is a fair day's work for a normal crew
 - (B) It is not necessary for the trucks to travel too fast
 - (C) The amount of waste collected can be handled properly
 - (D) The distance between stops is approximately equal
4. Based on the above passage, it is reasonable to assume that a sanitation officer laying out collection routes should NOT try to have:
- (A) An arterial street as a route boundary
 - (B) Any routes near the disposal area
 - (C) The routes overlap a little
 - (D) The routes run in the same direction
5. The term "logical progression" as used in the second paragraph of the passage refers most nearly to:
- (A) Collecting from streets after street in order
 - (B) Numbering streets one after the other
 - (C) Rotating crew assignments
 - (D) Using logic as a basis for assignment of crews
